

The International Environmental Communication Association

The IECA was founded in 2011 as a professional nexus for people and organizations engaged in research and action who want to develop more ethical and effective ways to communicate about environmental concerns in order to move society towards sustainability.

Why? Because the quality of our communication affects all areas of environmental affairs. How we communicate with each other about environmental issues, conflicts and problems, and about nature itself will determine how well we address the ecological crisis.

Please join us and/or support us with a tax-deductible contribution.

Our members are researchers, communication directors, students, outreach coordinators, teachers, artists, media analysts, journalists, public affairs officers, mediators, photographers, filmmakers, activists, consultants, marketers...

Current organizational members include:

- The Yale Project on Climate Change Communication
- Greenpeace International
- The George Mason University Center for Climate Change Communication
- University of Utah Department of Communication
- The Knight Center for Environmental Journalism at Michigan State University
- Griffith Centre for Cultural Research, Griffith University
- Alan Alda Center for Communicating Science

Our mission is to foster effective and inspiring communication that alleviates environmental issues and conflicts, and solves the problems that cause them.

The IECA is an official non-governmental organization observer to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change.

Benefits of Membership

- Environmental Communication, the leading journal in the field
- The EC List weekly digest of stories, projects, research and other vital signs from the world of environmental communication
- The Conference on Communication and Environment
- The Environmental Communication Master Bibliography
- Member directory and member news
- Listings of jobs, events, calls, films, courses, programs and more
- Professional networking and collaboration
- Training courses
- Discounts for student and lower income country members
- and more...

Join now at theieca.org