

Year-Long Training in

ECOPSYCHOLOGY

With Andy Fisher

In this training, a small group of people will work intensively over the course of a year, going deep into what ecopsychology means for each of us. We will meet four times, once per season, starting in the spring of 2017.

This is a unique opportunity to study with Andy Fisher, PhD, a leading ecopsychologist who combines the skills of an interdisciplinary scholar, healer, wilderness guide, and lover of all things poetic and earthy. Having worked the leading-edge of ecopsychology for more than two decades, Andy will work closely with you to find your own edge of learning and personal transformation.

Meeting dates are in April, August, and October, 2017, and January, 2018

Cost: CAN $1800 + HST (paid in 5 instalments), includes accommodation and meals

Location: Sumac wilderness retreat centre in eastern Ontario, Canada

For more information and to register, visit: www.andyfisher.ca

*Andy Fisher, PhD, is a major figure in ecopsychology. Author of one of the field's primary texts, Radical Ecopsychology: Psychology in the Service of Life (2nd Ed.), he keeps up an active schedule of teaching and writing. His course on ecopsychology at the University of Vermont is often described as life-changing. Andy is also a rites of passage guide and a psychotherapist in private practice.*

www.andyfisher.ca