Journalism and Climate Crisis

Public Engagement, Media Alternatives

Robert Hackett, Simon Fraser University, Canada, Susan Forde, Griffith University, Australia, Shane Gunster, Simon Fraser University, Canada and Kerrie Foxwell-Norton, Griffith University, Australia

"A richly perceptive, rigorously informed engagement with pressing challenges journalism faces when reporting climate change issues. This book recasts current debates from critical vantage points, successfully interweaving theory-building with empirical case studies to inspire fresh analytical perspectives – informed by strategic priorities – to open-up alternative ways forward. Highly recommended."

-Stuart Allan, Professor and Head of the School of Journalism, Media and Cultural Studies, Cardiff University, UK

Journalism and Climate Crisis for the first time, brings journalism and environmental communication research into dialogue with one another, asking: what models, and what institutional supports, can enable journalism to contribute better to informing and mobilizing civil society to mitigate crisis and move towards more sustainable futures?

The book provides an overview and unique synthesis of key relevant literature in these fields, as well as fresh case studies, encouraging students and instructors alike to think anew about the performance and responsibilities of journalism in the context of global crisis.
